Dear Mr. Dulles:

I want to bring to your attention the name of [redacted] who your Agency provided as my secretary during the [redacted]. I cannot praise her too extravagantly. She is an extremely competent secretary and stenographer. But more than that she has remarkable poise and good sense in the general management of an office, in receiving visitors and in handling all the special problems which arise that require some initiative, imagination and general intelligence.

STAT

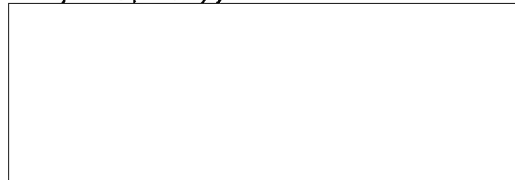

If I could possibly make it financially attractive to her, I would try to steal her from the Agency and take her [redacted]. Since I can't do this, the least I can do, therefore, is to say that it will be a serious reflection on CIA if you don't find a first-class opportunity for her once she comes back to work. (At the moment she is convalescing from a serious back injury but she should be fully recovered within a few weeks, I believe.)

Believe me, these comments are not made casually. I have never in my life written unqualified compliments as these about a person like this.

My cordial regards.

STAT

Sincerely,

ER 61-2257/a
